

Studying the emerging trends in media arts has taught me that these trends are not only in media arts; these trends transcend to everything in life. For example, the trend of using color palettes is not only in media arts but is also evident in clothing, interior design, and etc. Learning about the trend of flatter designs was interesting because this trend shows how big of an impact cell phones have on the designing process. It is fascinating that the trend of flatter designs mostly came about due to the constraints of smart phones. I really enjoyed investigating that and seeing the evolution of social media designs, smart phone designs, and media designs. As smart phones and technology continues to evolve, I am excited to see in which other ways technology will influence the process and final product of media arts and designs. After watching some of my classmates' work, I learned that I can be more direct with my video clips by showing directly some examples of what I am trying to explain.
